The power of Positive Parenting

Positive parenting is showing children love, warmth, and kindness. It is about encouraging and training children to behave in the way that you want them to. It's about helping youngsters thrive by providing them powerful messages such as; you are loved, you are good, and you matter.

Research reveals the power of positive parenting

- Positive parenting sets children up for success: Research shows that positive parenting helps children do better in school, have fewer behavioral problems, and stronger mental health.
- Positive parenting helps the teenage brain: Neuroscientists discovered that positive parenting contributes to better functioning in the brain regions associated with emotions and cognition during the teen years.
- Positive parenting is linked to a happy and healthy adulthood: Harvard scientists found that positive parenting has long-term benefits, including better relationships, mental health, and well-being during adulthood.

Five ways to provide positive parenting - PRIDE skills

The PRIDE skills are five positive parenting techniques that can easily be used in every day life. The skills have been shown in studies to be a successful way to support children's development.
